Something WILD!

Beneath the subdued exterior of Mansfield High School lies something a bit unusual.

I know what you're thinking...there's nothing even remotely wild about MHS. Oh, but there is!!

Although the building seems ordinary from the outside, the students and the staff make it an extraordinary school. Throughout this book, we have followed the daily lives of the people who fill the halls of Mansfield. And although some activities may seem basic, it's the people involved who make it different, exciting and, at times, even wild.

Bill Patrinos and Lori Kitchen take a rest on the stairway.

Jeff Malone attempts to join Ryann Delsignorre in a handstand.

Principal's Address

Edward A. Rosa
Principal of Mansfield High School

Dear Members of the Class of '94:

Congratulations for having completed all the requirements and earning your high school diploma. I'm confident that the education you received at Mansfield High School has prepared you well for the next step in your life.

Best wishes for success in the future, and I hope you will always have fond memories of your years here at Mansfield High School.

Sincerely,
Edward A. Rosa

Vice Principal

WILD LIFE

Although it may seem to the Mansfield High student body that life is just one big class, there is more to students' lives than school.

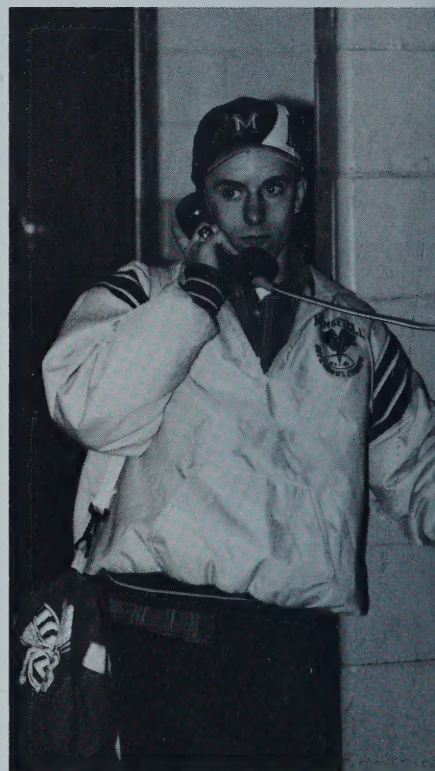

For the typical MHS student, school is only one aspect of life. The six hours of classes, tests, and grades make up a mere quarter of every weekday and leave the weekends free. "I spend a lot of time in school, but I also have a lot time for myself," says Lisa Herrick.

So what does the MHS student body do when they aren't filling the halls of the high school? Many students use their spare time to catch up on their favorite TV shows or to unwind from the day of school. "I go home and sleep," comments Chris Costa. Though the majority take time out during the afternoon to work on assignments for class, others punch-in at a job to earn spending money.

As for weekends, several MHS students participate in sports like swimming or karate which are not affiliated with the school, while most opt to hang around with their friends. "I drive everywhere to look for people. Wherever people are, I'll go," states Jackie Argenzio. Whether driving around together, catching a movie, or combing the mall, Mansfield students enjoy their lives outside of class.

Like many of MHS students, Bobby Wickersham spends time on the phone.

At right, Kristin and Kate Shaver spend some sisterly time together.

In the off-season, Jason Aleman shapes his muscles in the weight room.

Like many of her classmates, Laurie Thibault works the checkout at Ro-Jacks supermarket.

For some MHS students, participating in sports outside of school is a ...

Stroke of Genius

Although Mansfield High School fields teams in over fifteen sports during the fall, winter and spring seasons, some students opt to pursue sports outside of school.

Since high school soccer only lasts one season, many students choose to play indoors or on a spring team to keep up on their game. "I love soccer," remarks Melissa Sheridan, "And playing indoors develops my skills for the outdoor season." Dave Toulumtzis also enjoys indoor soccer, "It's something to do besides winter track." A number of high school soccer players join the town team or a club team during the spring. "I couldn't last a whole season without soccer," explains Stacey Mullin.

The fact that Mansfield doesn't have a pool doesn't stop Angie Richer or Emily Alland from participating on a swim team. "I started swimming in first grade and this is my twelfth season," comments Richer who swims at the North Attleboro YMCA on the Hockomock team along with Alland.

Bryan Mederios plays hockey in a men's league in Franklin once the high school soccer season ends. "If the school had a hockey team, I'd be the first one on the ice."

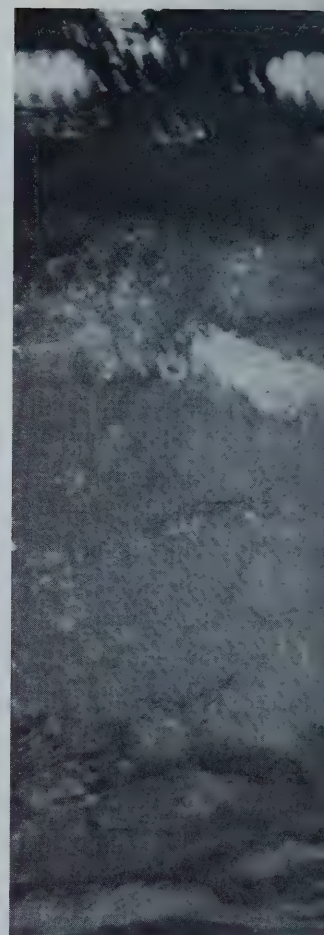

Mansfield's lack of a ski team doesn't prevent anyone from heading to the slopes once the snow falls. "Skiing is the best sport," states Ryan McKinley "It's a great feeling."

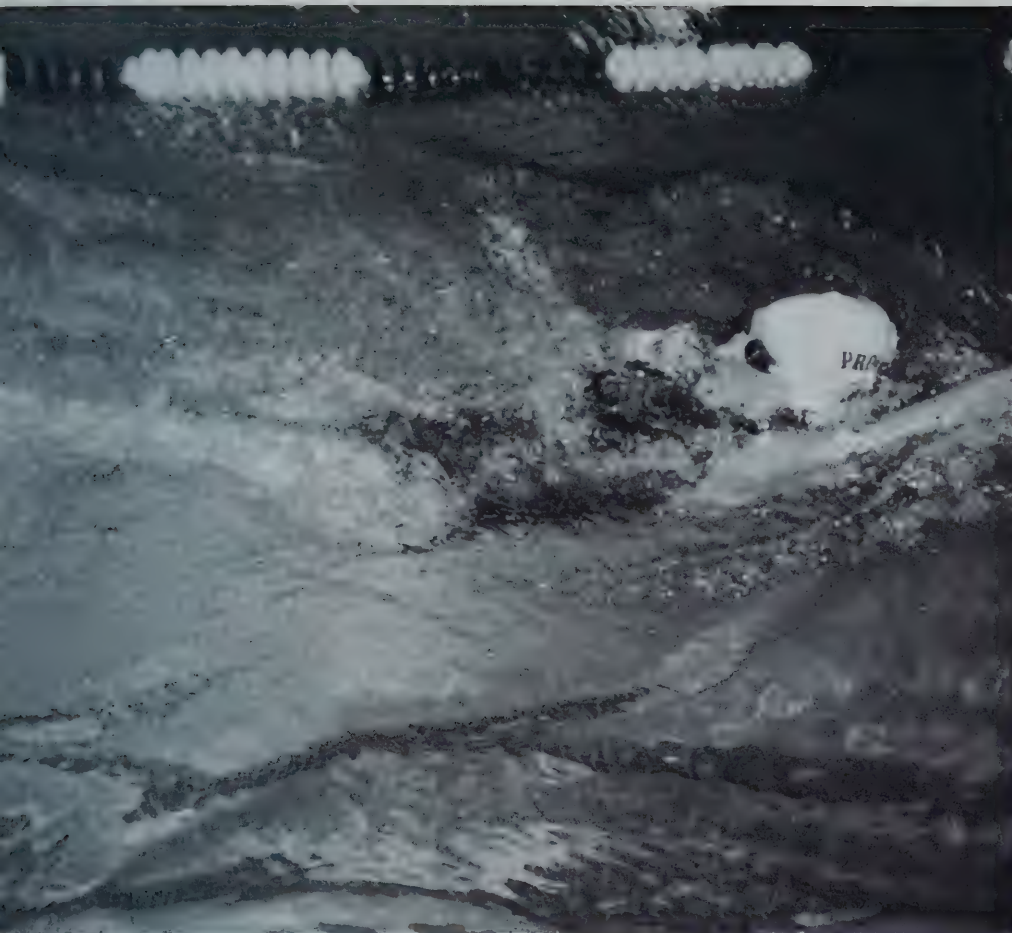

Keith Infantino, a blackbelt in Karate, practices his form.

John Maldonado and team plan a strategy during the Nard Bowl.

Swimming up a storm, Emily Alland works on her backstroke.

Jen Darling enjoys horsebacking in her spare time.

A school-wide survey reveals how students battle ...

The Homework Crunch

Almost every student has gone through it: a day when teachers lay on the homework as if only his or her class exists. By the end of the day, your bookbag is so laden with homework you need a forklift to get it home. Luckily, for most MHS students, loads of homework isn't an everyday occurrence. Most MHS students report they have between 1-4 hours of homework a night. Of all the classes, juniors complain of having the most homework sometimes spending over 4 hours on their studies.

A large group of MHS students say they do their homework at a desk, a sign of good study habits. But the second most popular place is in front of the TV.

According to the survey, MHS is not a school of procrastinators. Practically everyone begins his or her essays and long-term projects at least a few days in advance.

As for the classes that take up the most time--freshmen spend the majority of their time on biology and algebra and sophomores put a good part of their energy into English and geometry. Both juniors and seniors feel English homework is the most time consuming for them.

"I do my homework at 7 or 8 o'clock. After I eat supper--supper takes priority."

— Sean Gray

"Two minutes before my homework is due, I do it. I go to class early, sit down, and do it right then. That's the secret to my success."

— Dave Korins

Dave Pazniokas concentrates on American History.

Reviewing their vocabulary lesson, Mike Scarpellini and Keith Picard work together in study.

Say WHAT?

"Working's cool. I meet people from other towns and make new friends."
— Stephanie Correia

"I hate it. They make me work Saturday nights."
— Bryan Medeiros

"Bradlee's and Ro-Jacks are the places to work for people at this school."
— Kelly Mainones

"I save most of my money for college."
— Katie Borroni

Unloading boxes, Doug Crawford stocks shelves.

Working 5 to 9

After-school jobs are a growing part of MHS students' lives.

While some MHS students spend their free time watching TV, or shooting hoops, many members of the student body use their spare time to earn money. Chances are that anyone entering Ro-Jacks Supermarket will meet at least one Mansfield High School student. Mike Butler works as a grocery clerk, "I stock shelves and price items," he explains. Brian Thibault, Katie Borroni, and Laurie Thibault scan groceries at the check-out. "It's an okay job," remarks Brian Thibault. "Sometimes people are moody and give you a hard time, but otherwise it's all right."

Brian Guild finances his car by working in the Ro-Jacks meat department.

A few students work at restaurants after-school. Bill Patrinos works at his parents' pizza place in Pawtucket, Rhode Island making deliveries. Work is busy at 'Fisherman's #3' where Christine Lambropoulos puts in her hours. "I do a little of everything--waitressing, cooking, washing dishes," she says.

Many students choose to work with children. "I want to be a pre-school teacher and this is great experience," notes Michelle Joyce who works at 'Mansfield Kids' day-care center.

Shelving books, taking inventory, and helping customers, Elizabeth Amoruso spends her time working at Book Ends.

Making the Grade

Mansfield High School students have various attitudes towards grades.

Varying feelings surround the topic of grades at MHS. Some students don't put a lot of weight on their marks. "I don't even care about grades," comments Jeff Malone, "It's all in the effort. I think just about everyone would get the same grades if they all put the same amount of time and effort into their classes." Angie Richer feels that, over-all, learning is more important than letter grades. "Grades should come second to learning," she says. Dave Toulountzis believes, "Grades are very important. Learning is more important but, in most classes, grades are a good indication of what you've learned."

For the majority of MHS students, grades are the source of much stress. "Good grades are necessary to get into college," notes Bill Patrinos, "Grades have to come first." Lorrie Tobin adds, "I stress all the time because grades are so important to colleges."

Not all student agony over grades comes from worrying about college. "Even though I'm a freshman, my grades count on my G.P.A.," notes Mary Ann Tomase. Parental expectations drive many students also. "My parents want good grades" says Kevin Eagan.

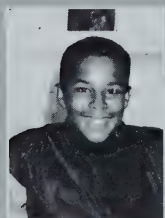

Samantha Stowell experiences similar stress, "My mom puts endless pressure on me. She knows grades are important and she wants me to do my best."

Craig Smith, Matt Levesque and Marty Bray work on their assignments for sociology.

Below, students and a parent share their thoughts and feelings on every possible grade. Also, teachers generalize on the meaning of grades as they apply to their classes. Note: the below representation does not fully explain the students' or teachers' philosophies; rather it gives a general overview of the thoughts and attitudes surrounding grades on a cross-section of the MHS student body.

MHS students always find ...

Time To Relax

Stress--it begins with the first day of school and lasts until the end of the year. Besides the everyday tests, quizzes and essays, midterms, finals, research papers and presentations in combination with athletics and club activities leave students drained.

But every MHS student finds an escape through relaxation. In general, students recover from the hectic day by listening to music, talking on the phone, being with friends, and sleeping. "I always have the radio on. I love to listen to it," says

John Maldonado retreats to a bubblebath following a grueling day of school and soccer.

Kelly Mainones. Chris King, a junior, feels that the stress has only increased since his freshman year. He finds relaxation in "listening to soothing tapes and eating."

While some Mansfield students use worry beads and stress squeeze-toys to combat the pressures of the daily grind, others choose more physical methods. "I scream to get rid of my anxiety. It helps me to unwind," says Shannon Burwell. "I forget about my problems but I get a sore throat." Jeff Malone opts for hot baths to refresh him after a hard day. A large group of students choose exercise as a form of relaxation. Although no one opted for yoga, many people said they like to run, lift weights, or do aerobics to ease their tension.

Kristin Downey takes a short nap on the bus on the way to Boston for a fieldtrip. "I think that was the only time this year I've had some rest," she notes.

Even though there are numerous brothers and sisters attending MHS together, there aren't any signs of ...

Sibling Rivalry

Back in elementary school a brother or sister was just someone to play with and to tease. As middle school came along, siblings oftentimes grew apart. "I thought my sister was too young to hang around with. Our lives were really separate because of the age difference," remarks one older sister.

But a lot changes in high school. While Mike Phipps says that having his older sister Melanie in the same building doesn't matter, he admits that he felt more comfortable coming to the high school knowing she was there. Gina Dei, whose brother Vinnie is a senior, says, "I like having him around. He knows what I'm going through and he keeps me out of trouble."

Some MHS students feel more strongly about being in the same school as their siblings. "I hate it. It's bad enough I have to see him at home," laughs Jason Perry. Lorrie Tobin felt completely different, "Leah and I fight, but all sisters do. We have a lot of fun together. I love her."

It's hard to say what the majority of brothers and sisters at MHS feel about sharing the high school experience with a member of their family. But one of the most touching things to see is two siblings walking down the hall together laughing and talking. Some brothers and sisters wish life could be more like that; others live like that everyday.

"It's not that bad. Actually, I get along better with Maureen now that we're in the same school."

— Kristin Downey

"It can be annoying. He's always watching me and I can't do anything."

— Shaun Fitzgibbons

"Why would I watch him?!?"

— Kevin Fitzgibbons

THE WILD WORLD OF SPORTS

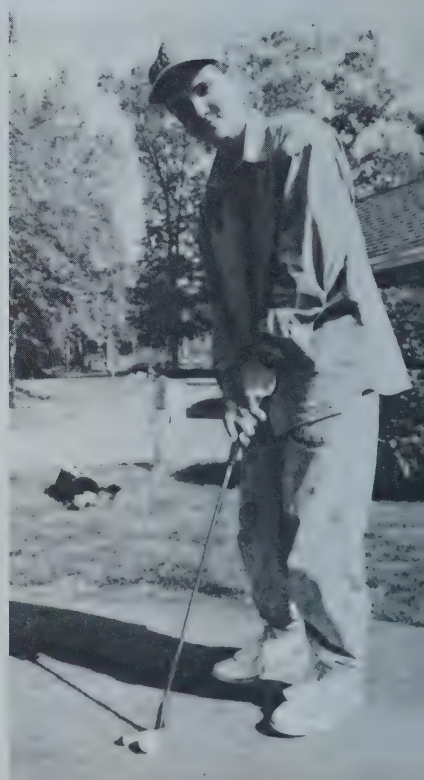

At Mansfield High School, sports are not just leisurely activities-- they're an intense world of competition.

As the competition starts, you are overwhelmed by anticipation, excitement, and the desire to win. Your adrenaline flows high and all the worries that plagued you during the school day vanish as you step out onto the court/field/track dressed in Hornet green. This is the wild world of sports.

Playing a sport at Mansfield High School involves more than the desire to spice up college applications; athletics require determination, strength, energy, and focus. With coaches emphasizing team effort and individual improvement, games and practices can sometimes be grueling workouts rather than simple exercise.

But when the season starts to drag, the MHS sports teams know how to let off steam and rekindle their enthusiasm. This year, on rainy afternoons, the boys and girls soccer teams took a break from the regular drills with diving-header mudslides. Meanwhile, the field hockey team, in the midst of a league title, set the night ablaze with a bonfire to get them ready for the Hockomock Championship game against North Attleboro. When the winter snow kept the girls and boys track teams from training outdoors, the groups turned on Richard Simmons and got in shape by "Sweating to the Oldies". Yet, these are merely a few examples of the zaniness that sometimes characterizes Mansfield sports.

In this section, we have attempted to capture the spirit of each sports team both in pictures and in words. As you turn the pages, perhaps you will relive the emotion of the season -- the thrills of victory and the agonies of defeat.

O Captain, My Captain

The captains of the MHS athletic teams play a big role in the success of the sports program.

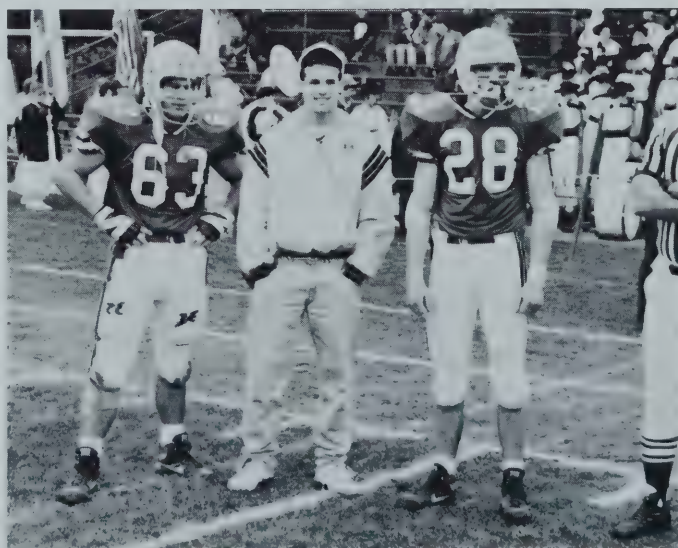

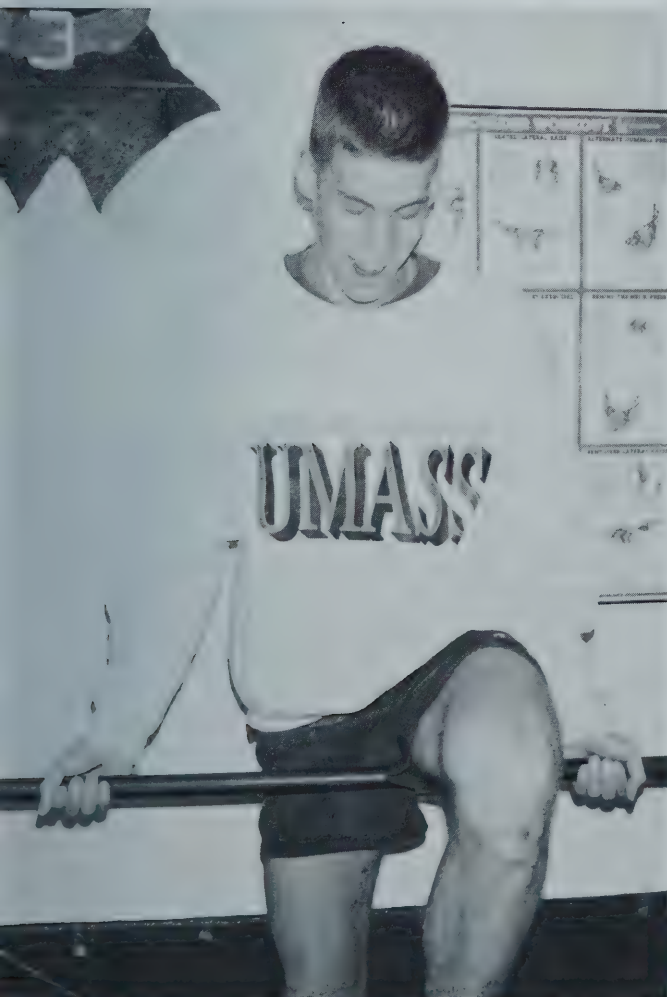

The position of captain on a high school team is not all excitement and glory. There's more to the title than the stitching on a sleeve or the pin on a jacket. Being a captain is not all perks; it involves leadership and optimism. So how does a MHS student-athlete handle such a demanding job?

First, captains must have confidence in their ability. Teammates tend to question a leader who doubts him or herself. Also, captains need to act in the best interest of their team and put their own needs aside. With a positive attitude and dedication to the squad, the captain sets a good example for his or her team to follow.

A captain's interaction with coaches and younger players is important, too. By treating everyone with respect, the captain earns respect and trust from his or her fellow players.

Leading a team also requires a lot of responsibility. In addition to scheduling summer practices, meetings, and spaghetti dinners, a captain must try to make the season enjoyable for everyone.

For the MHS girls soccer team, the season was a series of ups and downs. "We had a lot of problems playing consistently," notes one player. "We'd come out strong and fade, or start slow and surge. We just couldn't keep it up."

Struggling against the top-ranked Foxboro team, Mansfield came up short. "We had the desire," says midfielder Sarah Mullin, "But the scores don't always reflect our intensity."

The season's highlights included the two games against Franklin in which the Mansfield squad battled the second-place Panthers to a tie and close loss. Wins against King Philip boosted the Hornet morale during an exhausting mid-season stretch. The team ended the season on a high note, dominating the play and squashing the Rocketeers by three goals.

Run for Cover

Fielding one of smallest cross-country teams in the Hockomock League, MHS runners demonstrated talent and determination in achieving an impressive 5-3 record. The season might have ended even more impressively if the number-two runner, Brian McGrail, had not collapsed from dehydration at the finish line during a meet against Oliver Ames. He missed the last three meets, two of which were close contests for Mansfield. "I think I could've made the difference in those meets if I was able to run," comments McGrail. "The scores were so close."

Coach Sergio Morales inspired the team to improve consistently throughout the season. His top runners, senior Jeff Malone and Dave Korins, juniors Brian McGrail and Jarod Forget, and sophomore Adam Briggs were key contributors to the team's success.

All-Hockomock star, Jeff Malone, finished the dual season undefeated and was ranked one of the top runners in the state. He and senior Dave Korins, another consistent top-ten runner, will be sorely missed as next year's Hornets strive to improve on this year's performance.

Hot Shots

With their minds set on the title, the MHS field hockey team blazed to the top of the Hockomock League.

At the beginning of the season, no one expected the MHS field hockey team to match the record of past teams. But this year's eleven seniors were determined to prove themselves.

Led by captains Darni Garneau, Katie Borroni, and Lori Kitchen, the varsity team strived to meet their goals. "We were a new team with Hockomock Championship potential and we capitalized on it," states Kitchen.

With energy and excitement, the girls won their first game of the season 10-1 over Sharon and kept winning. By their 8th game, the squad qualified for the state tournament, but qualifying wasn't enough. The team members wanted a championship. In a battle with Oliver Ames for first place, the field hockey team came up victorious and earned the top seat in the league. A final win versus North Attleboro clinched the official Hock title for the squad.

The season came to an end with the team's first loss and elimination from the tournament. Facing Holliston in their initial tournament game, the girls played to a scoreless tie in the regulation period, sending the game into overtime. But the Holliston team gained the lead 25 seconds before the OT period ended and the Mansfield team didn't have time to recover. "It's hard to end the season with a loss," one player notes, "but we played our hardest and won the title and nothing can change that."

Looking Good

The fall of '94 marked the beginning of a new era for the boys soccer team. With the arrival of a new head coach, Joe Bortolotti, the team developed a new style and a new attitude.

Under the guidance of Bortolotti, the team reached new heights. Although the season record amounted to a mere 5 wins, 11 losses, and 2 ties, the boys squad still managed to become the best team in the school's history. They also set a school record in defeating Foxboro for the first and second time ever. "We were elated," notes defender John Maldonado.

Of the eleven losses, five were decided by a single goal. "Losing those games was the worst," notes senior midfielder Ryan McKinley, "We played our hearts out for eighty minutes only to come up one goal short."

While the team played well as a unit, the individual performance of co-captain Bryan Medeiros proved to be a catalyst for the group. "He inspired us and raised the level of our game," says defender Chris King. In net, senior Mike Cauley consistently made the saves and finished the season with a record 1.78 goals against average. Overall, the individual skills of the players combined to strengthen the Mansfield team and change its reputation in the league.

Cheer Up

The Mansfield High School fall and winter cheerleading teams took to the air with new high-rising stunts.

This year, both the varsity and the junior varsity cheerleaders worked hard to improve their style. In the summer, the teams started training at a cheerleading camp held at the Roger Williams College in Rhode Island. Working from 9 o'clock in the morning to 10 o'clock at night, the girls practiced dance moves, stunts and cheers.

Back at home, the teams worked out with coach Van Pelt, fitness coach Mantia, and tumbling coach Yusuf to perfect their moves and new routines. The cheerleaders added a dangerous stunt called the basket toss to their performance. Throwing Hollis Dewey 20-25 feet in the air, the girls wowed the crowds at the rally and earned 2nd place in the Emmanuel College competition. In the Hockomock Jamboree, both the varsity and J.V. teams returned with awards. With their energetic routine, the varsity earned recognition for "Great Dance", while the J.V. cheers earned the younger squad "Best Voice".

Undefeated State Champions in 1992, the '93 Hornet football squad was the team to beat. Hockomock coaches predicted a season of close games and a tight League race. Unfortunately for Mansfield, the team came up short in many close games, knocking them out of contention for the League title.

"We had a really good team. We just made some mistakes that cost us games," remarks co-captain John Armstrong. Frustrated in their early-season games, the Hornets played hard against Canton to earn their first win.

While lesser teams might have given up, Mansfield's football squad showed their determination, winning four of their last five games to end the season with a 5-5 record.

Mansfield's 47-0 blow-out of Oliver Ames marked the turn-around for the team. "O.A. was ranked thirteenth in the state and we trashed them," remembers Josh Hines. "That game was a pivotal point in our season."

An impressive Thanksgiving Day win over Foxboro marked the end of the season for the Hornets. Judd Brown says, "If the season had to end, beating Foxboro was a great way to finish."

Putting Around

The 1993 MHS golf team is one of the most improved teams of the fall sports season. As co-captain Vinnie Dei put it, "Golf is a sport that needs time and practice. It can be frustrating at times, but when you're on, it's one of the best feelings."

Experiencing both frustration and thrills, every member of the team developed their individual skills through practice and competition. Co-captains Vinnie Dei and Jim Fasino led a youthful but experienced team consisting of Jim Thorton, Pat Folan, Dan Bonnyman, John Gannon, Nick Dei, and Katie Steele to five wins early in the season.

Encountering a tougher round of competition in the second half of the season, the golf team suffered a streak of losses but ended the season with an 8-8 record.

Quite A Hit

The addition of a volleyball team to the school's fall sports was a hit with many students.

Mansfield High School added a new sport to its athletic program. A girl's volleyball team took to the court under the guidance of Peter Holster.

Since the school never sponsored a volleyball team before, many of the girls had to learn the basics about the game. "At the beginning of the season the girls had minimal skills," notes Coach Holster. "But as the season progressed, they all improved tremendously".

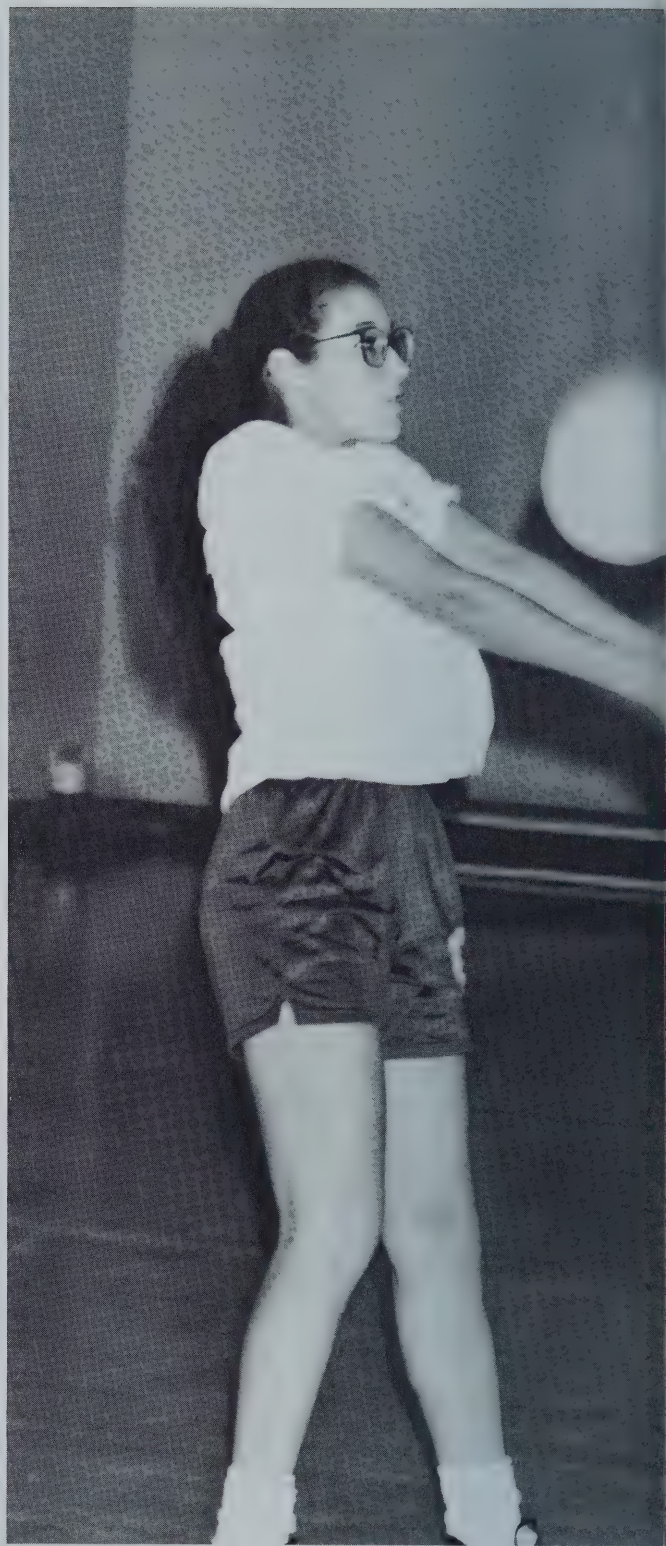

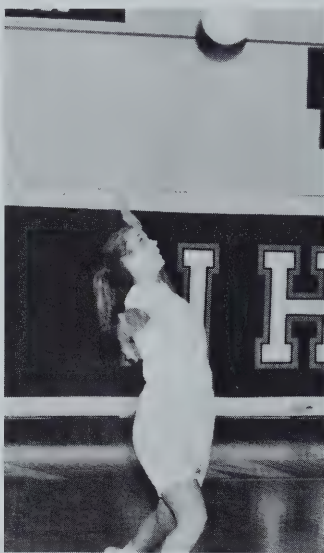

While the team did not compete in the Hockomock League and instead maintained a 'club sport' status, the group of twelve enthusiastic girls practiced twice a week and played in scrimmages against Norton, Norfolk Agricultural, and the French Exchange Students. Although the team suffered losses against Norton and the French students, their win against Norfolk boosted their spirits. "We had been practicing hard and it was good to finally win," notes one player.

Over all, the girls were pleased with this season's performance. "Although it wasn't completely successful, we worked hard and we had fun," says Kelly Mainones.

Stranded

Despite the tough season, the MHS boys basketball team's spirit and hard work kept them from being stranded in the Hockomock League.

Before the winter sports competition even began, the boys basketball team knew they would have a rough season ahead. With only four senior players, the team had to rely on underclassmen for depth.

While the team's endurance, speed and passing ability oftentimes matched and surpassed the talent of their opponents, the Hornet's shaky shooting skills cost them several games. The Mansfield team also had the unfortunate tendency of building a strong lead in the opening half only to lose ground and fall behind in the final minutes.

But the boys' season was not without its high points. Blowing out the South Shore squad by nearly 60 points in a non-league game, and trouncing Canton in both meetings, the Hornets showed their mettle. Also, the MHS team, having lost to King Philip initially, repaid the Warriors in their second face-off, dominating the entire game.

Mike Cauley searches for somewhere to pass.

Making Strides

Despite the snow-covered track, the girls track team trained hard and ended the season on a winning streak.

The girls winter track team had their best season in fifteen years ending with a .500 record. Why did they do so well? "I think it was our commitment to working hard and trying new things," said new head coach Donahue.

The girls opened the season with a 44 point romp over Oliver Ames and ended with a close meet against North Attleboro. "N.A. gave us the most exciting competition of the season," said sophomore Stacey Mullin. Mansfield came away victorious by a 12 point margin. Other wins included Sharon and Canton, where the girls swept the hurdles, high jump, and fifty meter dash.

Senior captains Lisa Herrick, Danielle Roberts, and Lori Kitchen led their team to four wins in the eight-meet season. Juniors Melanie Kostaras, Jackie Publicover, and Kristin Morris along with freshman Christine Whitty all contributed greatly to the team. Junior Gina Flammia had an outstanding performance, winning many firsts in the hurdles and high jump, and shattering the previous school record for hurdles with a time of 7.9 seconds. Despite these great personal achievements, the focus is on the team, not individuals. As sophomore Cat Henderson put it, "There's no 'I' in team."

The Drive

Struggling throughout the season, the girls basketball team found the inner drive to play on.

The Mansfield girls basketball team encountered some difficult competition in their season and found themselves struggling in the Hockomock League. Dropping their first four games, the Hornets earned their first win against King Philip and lengthened their streak to two games by defeating North Attleboro.

Despite coming up short in matches against Canton, Franklin and Archbishop Williams, the Hornet girls did not give up. "On the bus ride home from our loss to Archbishop Williams, I told the girls I wouldn't quit on them and I didn't want them to quit on me," remembers Coach Edmonston. And the team didn't quit. Coming out strong, they toppled a powerful Oliver Ames squad.

With a new coach and a new attitude, the MHS boys track team improved by...

Leaps and Bounds

With a positive attitude and a competitive spark, the boys track team sprinted its way to a successful season. Under the direction of coach Russo, the guys learned the rewards of hard work and practice. "This season was less laid back than previous years," notes Ryan McKinley. "There was more structure and motivation."

Although the high school lacks a indoor track facility, the team made the best of the situation by using the gym, the halls, and the snow-covered streets to train. But absence of equipment did not affect the talented runners. Hornet sprinters Rich Ruffing, John Guilfoy, Josh Hines, and Chris King combined to win top places in every meet. In the hurdles, Ryan McKinley, Al McKeever, and Brian Thibault jockeyed for placements. While the middle distancers Brian McGrail, Dave Sullivan, Vinnie Dei and Keith Johnson worked for the team in the 1000 meter and 600 meter races, a long distance squad of Mike Correia, Jarod Forget, Adam Briggs and Jeff Malone earned quality points for the Hornets. The addition of Jason Perry to the team of shotputters helped the Hornets to gain some ground in a usually weak event. New-comers Bryan Medeiros and Adam Herrick joined winter track veterans Malone and Thibault to make a strong high jump roster. "I had tried high jumping before in practice but, in the meet against Foxboro, the team needed the points so I did it and placed third."

Overall, the depth of the Mansfield team helped them overcome Canton, Oliver Ames, Sharon and Franklin. Although track is generally not considered a team sport, each and every member of the MHS boys track found support in their competitions. Feelings of pride and determination to succeed touched all the Hornet track team members during their best season yet.

Fresh

The Class of '97 brings a whole new spirit to the future of MHS sports.

Here at MHS, freshmen athletes are more than just people to carry the equipment or fill the water containers, they play important roles in the sports program. Because freshmen are essentially the future Mansfield varsity team members, the school takes special care in cultivating their talent. Freshmen teams in Field Hockey, Football, Boys and Girls Basketball, and Softball provide the ninth graders with opportunities to play against teams of their own strength as well as to receive more playing time than they might on a J. V. or varsity team.

ON THE WILD SIDE

With new groups and different activities, the club scene at MHS has taken some unique turns.

The rebirth of the MHS Mainstream kicked off a year full of new experiences for members of Mansfield High School clubs. Something about those funky notices hanging around the hallways screaming "Newspaper Meeting Thursday!" in fluorescent colors seemed to stir up the entire club scene. The Science Club broke loose from their traditional role as fall and spring planters, and included recycling in its list of major activities. Adding a new twist to their volunteer efforts, the National Honor Society went trick-or-treating for canned goods on Halloween. "It was fun being a trick-or-treater again and I got candy while doing something good for the community," notes one NHS member.

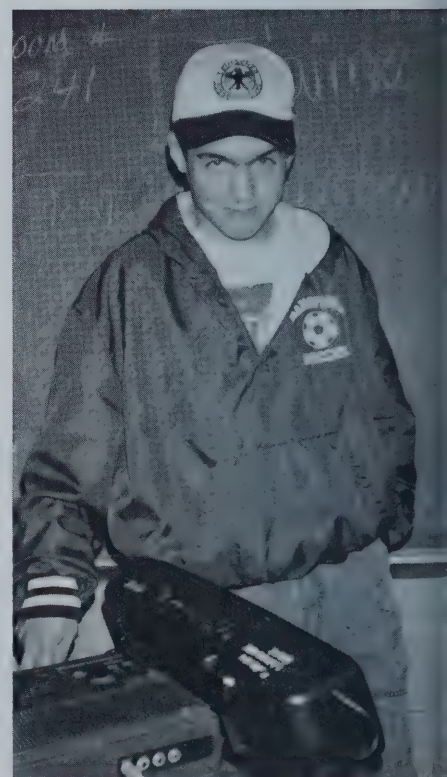

Teaming up, the French and Spanish Clubs headed to the Boston International Festival at the Bayside Expo Center for a day of cultural education and dancing. Students Against Drunk Driving also experimented with new activities, hanging red ribbons around the school and handing out Dum-Dum lollipops to remind students to use their brains before getting behind the wheel.

A group of Dungeons and Dragons enthusiasts earned status as a school club, bringing an unusually mystical and imaginative activity to the array of after-school programs. But the Math Team and Academic Decathlon kept their heads out of the clouds and achieved amazing success in their competitions.

As for the yearbook staff, the craziness came around eleven o'clock every Friday night while they were putting the finishing touches on pages. "Spending practically nine straight hours in front of a computer is enough to drive anyone over the edge," notes Sarah Mullin.

Rifling through the attic during the yearly summer cleaning, my mother and I uncovered a box of her high school memorabilia. Among the snapshots and academic medals, she discovered her high school yearbook. The book was in disrepair--the navy blue cover faded and wrinkled from water damage, the tattered pages yellow with age--yet the appearance of it did not dampen my mother's enthusiasm. Her hands eagerly swept through the pages stopping to point out an old friend, a prom date, or the terrible boy who had severed her ponytail in art class. As my mother sat on the attic floor engrossed in the twenty-five-year-old pages, I reflected on my own experience with the yearbook staff as well as the prospect of generating the 1994 annual.

With the help of a dedicated staff, the 172 pages representing the experiences and accomplishments of Mansfield High School students took shape. Seemingly endless hours and hundreds of photographs later, the computer printouts and page layouts were transformed into a book. In years to come, memories of a season record of wins and losses will inevitably fade and the decorations from the school dance will have long been removed. But, it is my hope that the MHS graduates will rediscover some of these moments in the pages of this high school yearbook.

Booked It!

Despite the time of night, the snow on the ground, and the clouds of smoke filling the hallways, the staff ran to the yearbook room to get the job done.

Above, Sarah Mullin, Mr. Hansen and Shannon Burwell trudge into school on a snowday to work on the yearbook.

Kristin Shaver, Shannon Burwell and staff discuss advertising strategies.

During my first day of high school, I was walking alone down the hall by the math lab only to find two individuals sitting on the floor underneath the display cases.

"Do you want to join yearbook?" one of the boys asked, holding up a pen and paper.

"I guess so," I responded as I took the blank sheet and scribbled down my name. Little did I know that the same signature would appear on thousands of business letters four years later.

Working on something virtually 24 hours a day, 7 days a week, can become a little overwhelming to say the least. Yet everything works out because people suddenly come out of the woodwork to help. For example, my sophomore year, I took charge of the underclassmen section and when I told my friend Sarah Mullin that I wanted stories throughout the pages, she immediately jumped on the opportunity to help. Sarah-- For the past three years, you have always been by my side. We've had our ups and downs but, in the end, we survived. The 1994 book is an amazing piece of work because of your dedication. Thank you so much!

Two hard-working people took on the challenge of becoming section leaders. Kerri--Can you believe you started out typing stories for me? Kristin--I can only think of Mr. V's play. I'm so glad you were the one who went with us to camp.

The most amazing things happened when people came forward to do the senior directories and the advertising. Myong, (I know you tried), Lori, Jeff, Erica, Andrea, Kristen, and especially Ryan and Lorrie, I couldn't have done it without you. Did you ever think we'd finish? Ads: We started out fine didn't we?--Kristen, Carrie, Lisa, Kerri, Neil, Kristin, Wayne, Mike, Sue, Karen, Kristin, Ronn + friends, Janet, and Danielle, I know it was only one day but it was a lot of work. Carrie and Kristen--you were great. Thank you all.

Mr. Hansen--Thank you for being here when we needed you most. We did a great job, didn't we? (I promise to only ask once!)

Last but not least...Mom, Dad, Kelli, Brian, Auntie, Chuckie, and Nonno, I love you! I know I always say that but now it's in print. I owe everything to you and that individual who had me sign my name. Thank you God for giving me all these wonderful people in my life.

WILD CHANGE

Since entering Mansfield High School, the Class of '94 has undergone some serious changes.

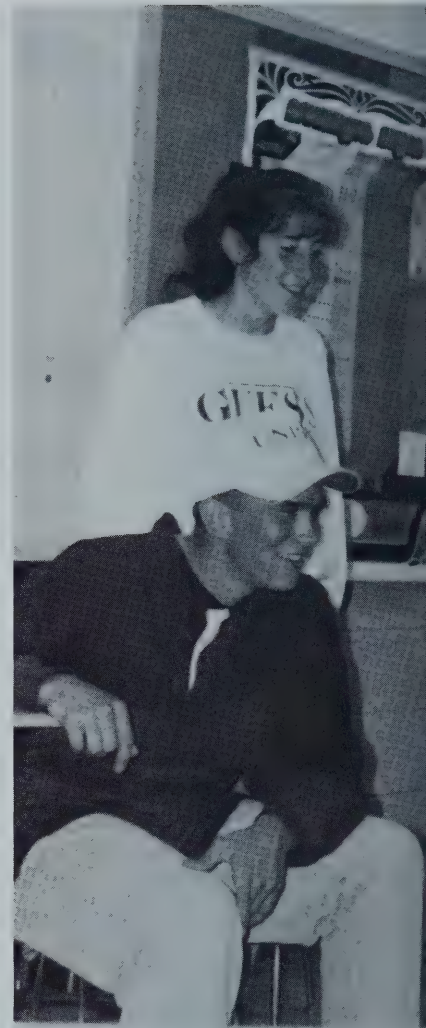

Sometimes it feels like just yesterday when all of us were Freshmen. The time we've spent at Mansfield High School seems to have flown by and catapulted us straight to Senior year. But during these past four years, a lot has happened and much has changed. Few of us, if any, are the same person we were back in 1990 when we came to MHS for the first time. Aside from the physical differences, an inch here, a pound there, each of us has found new interests or sought new goals.

"I care less about what other people think of me than I did when I was a Freshman," says Jessie Moore, remembering how she's changed. "I'm more of an individual now." For many Seniors, these years at Mansfield have been a time for us to learn about ourselves. Escaping the confines of conformist life, we have learned to cultivate our own personal styles and feel secure about our differences. With more activities and classes available, and the freedom to make our own choices, we have been able to discover our strengths and pursue our likings.

Certainly, our attitudes and preferences will continue to change throughout our lives. But to look back and see how much we all have grown, both personally and as a class, in just four short years deserves a moment of reflection.

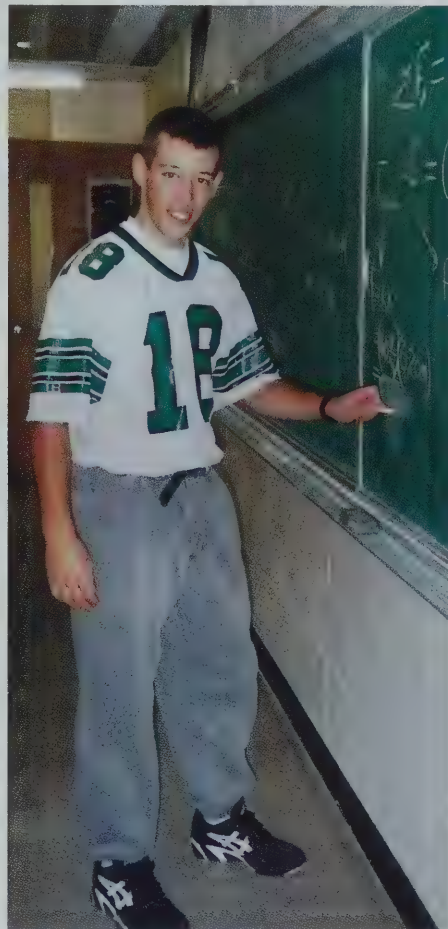

Becky Beaudoin shows her wild side, as well as her enthusiasm, from the sidelines.

YOUTH GONE WILD

"Last summer at music camp I joined four other guys in a topless dance around the lobby," jokes junior Dave Touloumtzis recalling his wildest feat ever. From the outside, he seems like a regular Mansfield student: determined, studious and polite. Who would ever guess he's a dancing fool after school?

However, Dave Touloumtzis isn't the only wild one roaming the hallowed halls of MHS. Most of the student body tends to get a little crazy just for the fun of it. "Doing wild things is part of being a teenager," one underclassman notes.

Whether it's dancing around in the parking lot or riding a skateboard down the corridor, the underclassmen are always involved in something unusual. "The list is too long to tell," says Ericka Tucker, reflecting on her zany experiences. Sabrina Greenfield believes becoming a prop for the school play "Museum" and having her entire face covered with plaster of Paris was her wildest adventure. "It was weird," she says. But Juniors aren't the only ones letting loose. Freshman Jessica Lincoln remembers dancing around in a towel singing "Wild Thing" into her imaginary microphone as her zaniest act, while sophomore Wayne Baille thinks his "impersonation of a police officer and [attempt] to arrest the kid down the block" qualifies as his most unusual antic.

Whatever the occasion, MHS underclassmen are ready to kick back in order to have a good time. Notes one sophomore, "Life is too short to take everything seriously. Sometimes you just have to forget about what other people think and have fun."

On the sidelines, Wali Barrett puts ice on his injured knee.

Sophomores Kevin Barre, John Gannon, Dave Rea, and Joe Barrows squish together on the bleachers.

Junior Juggling

Juniors discuss the pressures of the eleventh grade and how they cope.

"I sleep it off, its easy," comments Fred Vallett, describing how he handles the stress of Junior year. With school and extra-curricular activities, students have little time to themselves. "I'm always busy doing something," notes Mary Herrick.

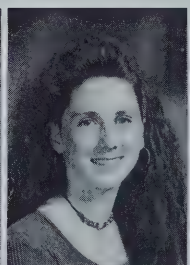

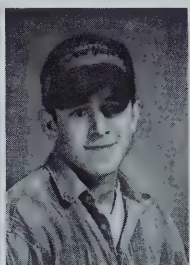

Despite the hectic schedule of Junior year, students still take on more activities. Sports and clubs as well as jobs, driver's ed. classes, and social activities all cram into the typical Junior schedule. But Juniors don't let the stress of their busy lives get them down. Dave Sullivan escapes the pressure by "staying involved in sports and taking it out on the field."

Although the busy life may seem nerve-wracking, Juniors continue to get involved in more and more activities. "I think it's because this is the year that counts to colleges," explains Amy Nelson. Also, Juniors feel that as their years at MHS wind down, they want to enjoy it as much as possible.

Because of their busy schedules, many MHS students don't have time for ...

Rest Stops

Remember the time when you hated to go to bed and begged your parents to let you stay up just a little bit longer? My, how times have changed! By Junior year everyone cherishes sleep and feels he/she can never get enough. "I could sleep 24 hours a day," comments Denis Shurtleff.

"There aren't enough hours in the day to get everything done, so sleep falls to the end of the list of priorities," remarks Kristin Downey. Many students agree that their activities and homework cut into their sleeptime.

"Sleep? That's what you do during the summer," says Dave Touloumtzis, explaining his busy schedule.

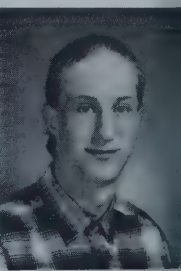

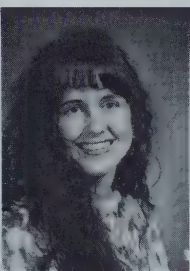

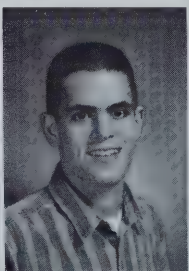

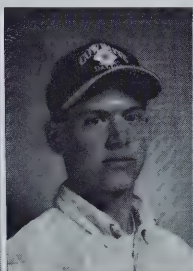

Although most medical authorities recommend 8 hours of sleep per night, the average MHS junior spends only 6 hours resting and compensates for the lack of sleep with coffee, tea, long showers, or mid-class naps.

Trying to catch a few Z's during the afternoon, Hilary Cheyne climbs into the quietest place she can find, an art shelf.

The Class of '96 faces the usual...

Sophomore Struggles

Many people think that our high school years are some of the best years of our lives. But the nature of the high school experiences evolves through each of the four years.

Freshman start the high school tense with nervousness over a new environment, new procedures, new faculty and staff. Just as they get used to the school, the year is finished.

Juniors have earned the status of "upperclassmen". They organize major events, like the prom and National Honor Society Induction, and anticipate their Senior year.

The graduating class of seniors has far too much to accomplish to worry about staying busy. Leading the younger students in their activities, completing college applications, preparing for the prom, the Senior banquet, and graduation eats up all Seniors' spare time.

Amidst all this activity, Sophomores often feel forgotten and left out. A Junior, reflecting on her Sophomore experience, described it as "A Black Hole, sucking all the fun and good time from school and leaving it black, without any memories." But a Senior was quick to rephrase it as "...getting sucked into being an active part of the school. Your personality and activities really develop as a Sophomore." So does athletic prowess, musical talent, dramatic confidence, leadership skill, and academic focus. Promising athletes like Kaitlin Hoffman (field hockey), Mike Lundell (basketball), Mike Felton (football), and Robyn Silva (soccer) add depth to varsity teams. The spotlight is increasingly focused on budding musicians like Stacey Mullin,

John Pierce, and Leah Tobin.

Sophomores also start to experiment with new roles on the various academic/athletic teams and extra-curricular staffs. Some have well defined goals; many search for their niche. No one can say with certainty how any student will emerge from his/her Sophomore year. The only certainty is that they are older and more experienced than they were a year earlier.

Nicole Longever and Mandy Epstein help Ryann Delsignorre to rise to the occasion.

Chow Down

Whether at McDonald's, Wendy's or the cafeteria, one thing is for certain... the sophomore class loves to eat. There are many hot spots around town to grab a bite. Cousin's Pizza is Kerri Dingivan's top choice, while Jimmy's Pub rates high with Stacey Mullin. Every sophomore has their favorite foods. While Rachele Caturano lives for spaghetti, Cheryl Danner cites french fries as her favorite.

As for the cafeteria meals, the majority of the sophomores had mixed opinions. Some said they had never really bought cafeteria food because they felt more comfortable eating lunches from home. Others thrive on cafeteria food. "The pizza and double cheeseburgers are great!" exclaims one sophomore. The tenth graders also enjoy the cafeteria's ice cream, potato chips, and large chocolate chip cookies.

The Sophomore class is definitely one hungry bunch. They can always be spotted with food whether it's in school or around town. Their message to the rest of the school? Chow down!

With his stomach growling, Scott Simonds digs in to his giant slices of pizza.

Gym Shorts

Despite the constant complaints, students realize gym is a worthwhile class.

Many students feel that Phys. Ed. is a useless class taking up schedule space. But Gym allows many students not involved in school or club athletics to participate in physical activity and sports; thus it helps students to maintain their health.

Phys. Ed. also allows class time for special lectures or assemblies such as AIDS awareness, date rape and violent relationships, and anti-drug programs. These assemblies provide students with information otherwise unavailable. Gym should continue to be a class requirement, and should be taken seriously.

The Freshman Feeling

The Class of '97 reveals what it feels like to be a freshman.

"Independence," responds Jen Perry, describing the feeling that the high school gives her. She explains, "There's more freedom in the high school than there was in eighth grade." Many ninth graders agree, the high school allows its students to make more of their own decisions.

The transition from the middle school to the high school also generated some nervousness in the class of '97. Uncertainties about upperclassmen concerned the majority of freshmen for the first few weeks of high school. "I felt young," remembers Casey Copley. "And I thought the older students would make fun of me." "I had nightmares about getting stuffed into a locker, but then I saw how small they were and I knew I didn't have to worry," explains one freshman.

Although, in comparison to other high schools in the area, MHS seems small, the incoming freshman were overwhelmed with the size of the building and the masses of people. "At first, I thought it was huge but now I'm used to it," notes Sara Mackie. The size also surprised Kristian Hutter, "[The layout] of the building was weird and there were so many people."

After time, most Freshman adjusted to the nuances of Mansfield High School, acclimating themselves to the building and ending their worries about upperclassmen. "I feel like a part of MHS," says Christine Kelley.

The MHS faculty may seem subdued at times, but they're truly...

WILD AT HEART

From the view point of students, teaching may seem tedious. After all, teachers already know about their subject and they discuss the same material year after year. But the true appeal of teaching doesn't lie in correcting hundreds of tests or assigning homework, it involves the students. Interesting a room of teenagers in a subject, motivating them to reach their full potential and instilling some knowledge in them requires a lot of creative effort on the teacher's part. Yet, the MHS faculty faces the challenge in some wild ways.

Generally, teachers try to be different, using a variety of activities and props, in order to grab their students' attention. While Mrs. Pineault makes collages with her classes to expand their French vocabularies, Mrs. Maciel uses giant cardboard dominos to teach her chemistry students factor labelling. "Those work really well in helping to explain the process," she notes.

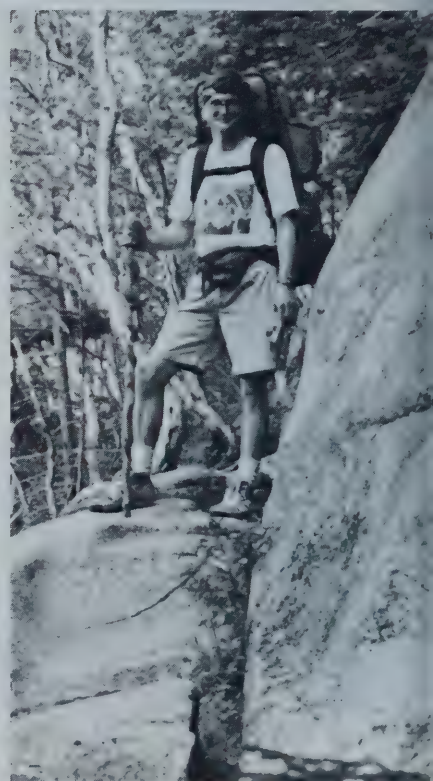

In Mr. Burger's Physics classes, students create bean launchers to better understand the concepts of physics. "I have students build things and it adds to the course," he says, "It gives them ideas on how to apply the laws they learn." When Mr. Perry taught Physics, he once tied on roller-skates to demonstrate Newton's Laws. But now that he teaches Biology, he has eliminated the wild stunt and replaced it with "[climbing] on top of the lab bench to wriggle on my stomach and demonstrate how earthworms move".

However, science isn't the only field where teachers introduce enjoyable activities to enthuse their classes. In Mr. Tiatorio's economics class, students use play money to recreate international trading and understand the advantages and drawbacks of trade policies. Mrs. Donahue hosts a mock wedding in her Spanish class to practice real-life vocabulary. And seniors in Mr. Venuti's English class integrate the movie "Rebel Without a Cause" into their unit on self-discovery and personal identity.

Regardless of the subject matter, the teachers at MHS find new and unusual ways to interest their classes.

After a long hike through the woods, Mr. Burger pauses to take a drink.

Mr. Tiatorio jumps in as freshman Otibo Arthur has his picture taken.

Mr. von Dorster demonstrates his weird sense of humor by balancing the English department's Halloween pumpkin on his head.

Warming Up

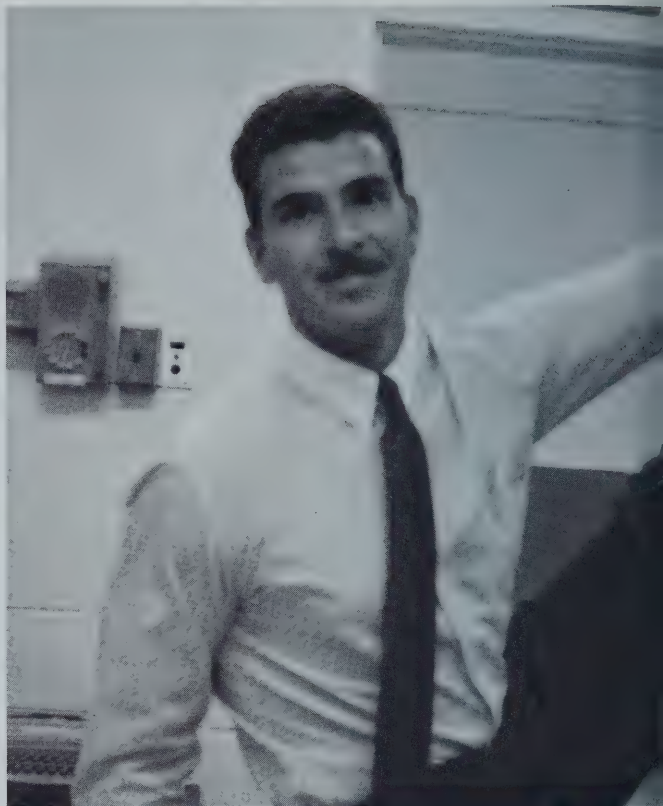

Both rookie and experienced teachers remember their first days in front of a class.

"I felt like a performer on a stage," says Mr. Clark, reminiscing about his first day of school as a teacher rather than a pupil. As one of the two student-teachers interning at MHS, Mr. Clark has the opportunity to experience the daily routine of classroom life.

Other teachers at Mansfield didn't have the option to work at a school before they graduated from college, or the privilege to practice before beginning full-time as a teacher. Mrs. Liljegren remembers her experience, "Because of the shortage of science teachers, my first high school waived the student teaching requirement. I was so nervous that first day and I think that student teaching would've helped me."

Mr. Morales stretches before an afternoon run.

Vacation Spot

Whether it's on the beaches or in the classroom, every member of the MHS faculty finds a great place to spend summer vacation.

For MHS students and teachers, "summer vacation" means a break from school, the 10-month grind.

Some of the MHS faculty don't take a break from teaching once school lets out. Mrs. Zangari, Mrs. Donahue, Mr. Conti, and Mr. Fitzgerald all teach summer courses for younger children during the steamy month of July. "I play Indiana Jones," says Mr. Deasy, describing the archaeology class he instructs at a Bridgewater school. Instead of looking for artifacts, Mr. Perry and his group of youngsters search the woods for insects in a summer activity entitled "Bugs 'n Things". Mr. vonDorster combines work and vacation when he voyages to France to teach summer school.

Many teachers choose to travel during their time off. Last year Mrs. Pineault toured Portugal and she's already planning a trip for the summer of '94. While Mrs. Liljigren heads for the Canadian border to cities like Montreal and Toronto, Mrs. Jackson flies south to Florida for the summer. "I rest my weary bones and it's great!" she says. Staying a little closer to home, both Mrs. Johnson and Miss DeGiralamo opt to vacation in Maine.

Inspiring Minds

MHS teachers talk about the factors that inspired them to become teachers.

At some point in their lives, the teachers of Mansfield High School decided to make teaching their profession. For Mr. O'Connell, the inspiration came from his ninth grade algebra teacher and athletic coach, Mr. Norton. Miss Wood's seventh grade biology teacher influenced her to become a teacher. "He explained things well and did neat activities," she says, "He made me like Biology."

As for Mr. Venuti, his love of English prompted him to go into teaching. "I love my subject and I love to share it with others," he comments.

Not every faculty member began his or her career as a teacher. Both Mr. Redding and Mr. Carver-Brown bought and sold securities on the stock exchange. "Initially I wanted to teach on the collegiate level but with the birth of my triplets, I left graduate school and became a broker," he explains. "Eventually, I came back to teaching. It was really what I wanted to do."

The advertising pages are essential in the production of a yearbook. Without the financial contributions of the community and the parents, this book would not have been possible. In the first section, the business community has shown their support for Mansfield High School. The following pages develop into family messages where parents, siblings and friends alike have created a gift for a particular graduating senior. The family section of the book is something new and special to many people, capturing timeless memories and experiences. The final pages of the yearbook are specifically designed for you. Take them and make them your own.

In a world full of problems and confusion, we have been brought together--all of different backgrounds, personalities and dreams. Yet, a common love unites us as one. Let us meet again, whether it be passing on the street or standing in an elevator--we need to know that good does survive.

Bryan,
We are so proud of what you have achieved!

Love,
Mom,
Dad, Rich
& Monica

Congratulations to a great daughter for your hard work and dedication.

For the last 18
years, you have always made us smile--keep on smiling, honey.

WE LOVE YOU!
Mom & Dad

Brian —

Go out there and reach for your dreams--you are your own greatest asset. We love you!!

Dad,
Mom
& Michelle
